Design and operation of a traditional smoker:

Many types of fuel can be used in a smoker. These fuels include hessian, burlap, pine needles, corrugated cardboard, paper egg cartons, rotten wood or herbs. Some beekeeping supply sources also sell commercial fuels like pulped paper and compressed cotton. Experiments have shown that smoke from pellets of the dried female hop flower, containing the sedative lupulin, is particularly effective.

The fuel in the smoker's burner smoulders slowly because there is only a small amount of oxygen inside, until a squeeze of the bellows provides a blast of fresh air. In this way the fuel is used more sparingly than in an open pan, and one load of fuel may last for several hours, or even days (if it is extinguished and rekindled again later). To calm the bees, the smoke must not be hot.
